Putin invited to Washington amid furor over summit

By Shane Harris, Felicia Sonmez and John Wagner
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - The White House announced Thursday that Vladimir Putin has been invited to Washington this fall, even as leaders in Washington tried to fully understand what broke the news to him. Coats, clearly surprised, took a deep breath. "Say that again," he said. "Did I hear you?"

She repeated the news. "OK," Coats said. "That's going to be special."

Mystery surrounds meeting

Coats said he would have advised against Trump and Putin's private had secretly recorded the more-than two-hour meeting, Coats answered, "That risk is always there."

Thursday's announcement was the latest unexpected turn in a week in which Trump has faced a torrent of bipartisan criticism over his cozy approach to Putin and his vacillating utterances about Moscow's election interference, all while brushing aside

Bulk of families separated at US-Mexico border remain apart

LOS ANGELES (Reuters) - With one week left on a court-ordered deadline to reunite children and parents separated by U.S. immigration officials, government lawyers reported on Thursday that 364 of some 2,500 families with children aged 5 and older have been brought back together in California, on reunification progress.

Crackdown on immigrants

The parents and children were separated as part of President Donald Trump's "zero tolerance" crackdown on illegal immigration. Many of the families entered the United States illegally, while some sought asylum at border crossings, after fleeing violence and upheavals in their home countries.

Children were sent to multiple care facilities across the United States, while their parents were incarcerated in immigration detention centers or federal prisons.
